Encouragement Challenge

Tell them something good they are doing in their life at the moment.	Give them a message of hope for the uncertainty of the future.	Be real and tell them about your failures: (this could encourage them in their failures as they learn about yours and how you responded, overcame, and grew!)	Tell them how they have enriched your life/made your life better.	Tell them you are praying for them/ask how you can pray for them.
Share an encouraging Scripture and your thoughts about it.	Thank them for something they did for you or someone else.	Cheer them on for a step they are taking in the right direction.	Remind them of gifts, skills, talents, or abilities you notice in them.	Send them a little just-because gift. (think outside-the-box like email or text)
Remind them of a precious memory of their childhood.	Share a positive character trait you notice about them.	Ask them if there is anything they need from you as their mom right now.	Share a time God helped you make it through a difficult situation. And how He can help them too.	Give them a hug and tell them you love them.

God's love is the divine attribute that indicates God's disposition to be self-giving and for the good of another. God's love is a communicable attribute, which means it's to be imitated by His children! Enjoy this challenge to grow in your love for your children and grandchildren.
